RECOVERY COLLEGE UNIBO

Life design as an embodied and relational practice for living with and in uncertainty approaches our collective futures as spaces of becoming, where imagination guides how we might attune ourselves to the unknown as an ongoing process of anticipating any number of possible futures. In order to perform and embody this approach as a curated session, the four dialogue partners – who draw on areas from physics, mathematics, and engineering to philosophy, education, wellbeing, and cultural studies – will experiment with each other and participants in a space of improvisation through dialogue and embodied practice guided by a collective inquiry: How can life design cultivate imagination and adaptability in the spaces of uncertainty? How experiment the integrality of being? How to be key-factor for personal, community and ecological well-being?

Engaging with participants we aim to co-create conditions to explore meaning through dialogue that acknowledges the limits of prediction and the necessity of wonder.
